Question 28

0 / 1 pts

Josephine is an undergraduate student who wants to increase her odds of getting into a clinical psychology graduate program. Based on recommendations provided in the textbook, which of the following is the best advice you could provide to Josephine?

- Avoid undergraduate courses in statistics and research methodology. These classes often lower an applicant's GPA.

Correct Answer

Get to know your professors. Build a positive, professional relationship with them so they can write meaningful, persuasive letters of recommendation for you.

- Limit yourself to one road to becoming a clinical psychologist. For example, once you have decided you want to earn a PhD from a scientist-practitioner program, do not consider other training options.
- Do not seek out clinically relevant experience while an undergraduate. Graduate programs prefer to train “fresh” graduate students, not students who have already acquired some skills through part-time experiences.
